

Gallery: A snow day in the desert

University Communications
February 2021

It's a tradition in Tucson: When snow makes a rare appearance, people rush outside to take photos in order to prove to others, and perhaps to themselves, that snow actually fell. On Jan. 26, when snow made a rare appearance on campus and throughout the city, we asked you to share images of you, your family and your pets enjoying the fleeting taste of winter.

As always, you came through.

We received great shots of snow on the mountains and desert, dogs living it up, and even a snowman that someone managed to build with a limited supply of snow. As we enjoy this week's unseasonably warm weather, remember winter's short visit last month with this two-part photo gallery:
