University honors 'Women of Impact'

Research, Innovation & Impact
October 2023

Thirty accomplished women took center stage at Stevie Eller Dance Theatre on Oct. 20, to be recognized as Women of Impact[1] by the University of ArizonaOffice of Research, Innovation & Impact[2]. The awardees, representing a wide range of colleges, units and disciplines across campus, were chosen by committee for their commitment to University values [3] as well as their professional achievements, community impact, unique skills in driving discovery and innovation, and their passion for empowering others.

In video remarks shared during the event, Arizona Gov. Katie Hobbs acknowledged the awardees' devotion to elevating those around them.

"It is obvious that you care deeply about our state – from the students who benefit from your dedication and passion to the people across Arizona who are impacted by your truly incredible research, innovation, scholarship, leadership and mentorship," she said. "We are stronger when we have a state that empowers and works for everyone, so please join me in continuing to support and uplift one another, and in blazing trails for all those that come after us."

The next generation of women making a difference in their schools and communities were honored as well, as RII invited principals of public high schools in Pima County to submit nominations for the Young Women of Impact award. The inaugural cohort from 20 public schools across seven Pima County districts was selected based on criteria similar to those used for the University awardees and were integrated into the event.

The young women of impact campaign was created because it's important to strengthen bonds between the University and its surrounding community by connecting motivated young women with University role models and cultivating a pipeline of potential future Wildcat Women of Impact, said Lisa Romero, associate vice president for marketing and communications in RII.

"Our University awardees are creating large-scale, long-term impact, and we need to reinforce to our young women that there is an incredible wealth of talent and opportunity right here in Tucson," said Romero, a 2023 Women of Impact awardee, who added that the University will "support them as they grow into the leaders they aspire to be."

In a video message, University President Robert C. Robbins commended the awardees for their leadership in research and societal impact and encouraged the high school students to return to campus as official Wildcats.

"We couldn't be a top 20 research university without our incredible researchers, innovators, tech transfer experts, communicators and outreach professionals who make it all happen," Robbins said. "You are leading the way while empowering those around you."

RII partnered with several University units on the Women of Impact recognition and celebration, including Arizona Athletics, the BIO5 Institute, the College of Agriculture, Life and Environmental Sciences, the College of Education, the College of Engineering, the College of Science, the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences, the College of Veterinary Medicine, the Eller College of Management, the Graduate College, the Mel and Enid Zuckerman College of Public Health, the Office of the Provost, the School of Information, Tech Launch Arizona and Tech Parks Arizona.

Nominations for the next cohort will open in late spring 2024.
