Every year, students and community members come together to protest sexual violence at Take Back the Night. Take Back the Night originated in the 1970s and continues to take place in communities across the country and the world.

Take Back the Night will include music, speakers, and an open-mic speak out, during which survivors of sexual violence can share their stories. There will also be a resource fair featuring campus and community organizations.

Join us on April 22 to take a stand against sexual violence!

Take Back the Night is free and open to all ages.
