University of Arizona Testing Office Achieves NCTA Certification

Date::
April 30, 2021

The University of Arizona Testing Office [1] has achieved National College Testing Association (NCTA) Test Center certification.

This certification demonstrates that the Testing Office meets the highest standards for quality and performance in test administration.

Dr. Craig Wilson, Vice Provost, Online, Distance and Continuing Education says, "In their tireless quest for excellence, our Testing Office led by Iris Kimbrough continues to strive for better ways to serve test-takers. Achieving NCTA certification, and doing so during a pandemic, is indicative of the professionalism and dedication of our testing team."

About the University of Arizona Testing Office

The University of Arizona Testing Office values the potential success that lies within every candidate and strives to provide up-to-date testing services, exceptional resources and an approachable environment where every test feels like an opportunity. About NCTA

The mission of the National College Testing Association is to enhance professional testing practices, offer opportunities for professional development, encourage professional support activities and to advance collaborative efforts among testing professionals, testing companies, and other policy-making agencies.

As NCTA states, "Test centers that earn NCTA Test Center Certification provide evidence during the certification process that their test center upholds NCTA Professional Standards and Guidelines. NCTA-Certified Test Centers exceed the expectations of examinees, students, faculty, staff and vendor partners."
